

ECCK Marine and Shipbuilding kick-off Meeting followed by an info session on the current & future position of the Chinese maritime industry by the European Union Chamber of Commerce in China (EUCCC)

EVENT OUTLINE

Last September, the world’s largest emitter of carbon dioxide, has promised to become carbon neutral by 2060. In a world where 80% of the volume of international trade is carried by ship, China has a far bigger role in “greening” global trade. Therefore, what is the Chinese maritime industry doing to achieve decarbonization? China’s decarbonization initiatives also provide major opportunities to accelerate technology innovation and industrial upgrading, further strengthening its economy. What does digitalization means for Chinese shipyards? How can they utilize it to make the market more attractive? etc.
