

ECCK Live Webinar on Different Ways to Respond to Disputes Foreign Companies Can Face in Korea

EVENT OUTLINE

Subsidiaries of companies based in Europe and European companies doing business in Korea can face disputes with their business partners. Some get amicably resolved based on negotiations before developing into a formal legal action. However, some disputes require the parties to take formal legal actions. In this webinar, we are going to present an overview of two routes companies can consider resolving commercial disputes. First is filing a complaint before the courts in Korea. We will present preliminary steps companies can take before filing a complaint. This is the appropriate way if the contract stipulates so or in the absence of arbitration clause. Another option is commercial arbitration in case the parties agreed to resolve their disputes by arbitration. Each option has both pros-and-cons from the perspective of multi-national companies doing business in Korea. And we will present their pros-and-cons as well.
